The girl of the period Bangeth her hair, And stoops to a myriad Tricks to seem fair.

Her waist is diminished; Her feet are made small; Her finger nails finished By artists from Gaul.

She uses cosmetic And poudre de ris; And oh! how æsthetie In dress she can be!

Her teeth are forever (When paid for) her own; What odds if they never Were bred in the bone?

Her cheeks, so admired, By drugs are made round; Her blushes acquired At so much a pound.

Her eyes she enhances By painting the lash, But naught wins her glances Like good solid cash.

Although 'tis alarming Some fellows, no doubt, Will call her quite charming. Well! just count me out!
